

Motion Code List

The Motion Code List contains motions that may be filed in this Court. Each motion code has a descriptive title. The Motion Code List is divided into categories by motion type; Contempt Motions, Domestic Violence Motions, General Motions, Parenting Motions, Property Motions and Support Motions.

Contempt Motions- Contempt motions may be filed when one party believes the other party has violated an existing court order. The motion shall contain a statement of the Court order alleged to have been violated, and the facts constituting the violation.

Domestic Violence Motions- Domestic Violence motions may be filed when parties have an existing Civil Protection Order and one party believes the other has violated the existing court order, or one party would like to modify the existing court order.

General Motions-General motions are motions that do not fit into any other category. They deal with issues such as establishing jurisdiction, attorney fees, and discovery to name a few.

Parenting Motions-Parenting motions may be filed when one party wants to establish or modify an existing order regarding their children or establish paternity. These motions should not be used if one party believes that the other party is in contempt of a parenting issue.

Property Motions-Property motions may be filed when one party wishes to address an issue regarding property such as real estate, assets, vehicles and household goods and furnishings.

Support Motions-Support motions may be filed when one party wishes to establish or modify an existing court order pertaining to child or spousal support. These motions should not be used if one party believes that the other party is in contempt of a support issue.
